The Bible

Christianity is a “religion of the book.” Like Judaism and Islam, we have a sacred text that we believe is Godly inspired and is the authority under which we conduct our lives as Christians. However, our Bible is very unique when compared to other “books.” For example, we may read parts of the Old Testament (Genesis through Joshua) and read a coherent story. However, that is not true for the entire Bible. The books of the New Testament do not present an orderly story that is designed to be read from start to finish (Matthew to Revelation). This is important to know because learning about God’s word through the scripture requires understanding how it is arranged and how to study it. This is why Bible classes are important, be they Sunday morning, Wednesday night, or other settings where Christians gather to study. Through these studies we will see that the Holy Spirit inspired the writers to reveal God through the Gospels, through letters, through narrative stories, and even poetry. Therefore, may we avail ourselves to study so that we may encounter the richness of God’s inspired word, The Bible.
